QUIET OPS // LEAVE-BEHIND

Every Process Is a Recipe and Five Questions Say If It Is Ready

Five questions to answer before you write a job down

The job: _____

1 Who owns it? (Accountable)
One name next to the outcome, and the one place where the current version lives.

2 What goes in?
Each input, where it comes from, and what to do when it is missing.

3 What are the steps, in order, and who does each? (Responsible)
One action each, one doer (a person or an agent), and a result you can check. Example: compare each invoice total with its order total.

4 Who approves, and what do they see? (Consulted)
The results that need a yes, the person with the authority to give it, who is asked first, a backup, and the one item that differs.

5 When is each step due? (Informed)
A time for every step, and who is told when one is missed.

HOW TO READ YOUR ANSWERS

All five answered: write the recipe, then check it against the unusual cases of the last year.

An answer is "it depends" or "ask whoever does it": that part lives in one head. Write it down first.

A step where an agent would have to stop and ask is not ready.

Write the job down once. Anyone, and any agent, does it the same way.

A recipe: an owner, inputs, steps in order, an approver, a deadline for each step. RACI light: Accountable, Responsible, Consulted, Informed. Quiet Ops: field notes from a COO. Eric Hollebone. More: github.com/e-hollebone/offers/tree/main/every-process-is-a-recipe
